

Portland's Brooklyn Yard Turntable Nears Completion

By ROGER WOEHL, Oregon Rail Center. Photos by Dale Birkholz.

Located at the Portland crossroads of rail lines old and new, the Oregon Rail Heritage Center is in the process of restoring and reconstructing the best of Oregon's rich, diverse rail history. Visitors from destinations near and far experience the power, magnitude and significance of the world-famous American Freedom Train locomotive SP 4449, the "Lady of the Pacific" SP&S 700 and the 1905 vintage OR&N 197/UP 3203. After decades in an old roundhouse in Southeast Portland's Brooklyn railyard, the City of Portland's three steam locomotives were moved to the Center when it opened in 2012. Along with the locomotives, the organization also rescued the heart of that yard - the historic turntable.

Restoration began in 2019 on the nearly 100-year-old Brooklyn Turntable, led by legendary rail preservationist Doyle McCormack. Built in 1924 by the American Bridge Company, the turntable bridge received new bracing, trucks and motors. It has been sandblasted back to its original luster. The 100-foot-long steel bridge, sunken track and pivot base will span a structurally-reinforced pit in the Center's front yard. The pit has been completed and hundreds of yards of concrete and steel reinforcement has been set in the front yard of ORHC.

FINISHED CONCRETE STRUCTURE – To be used for mounting the turntable bridge.

When complete in spring 2024, the Brooklyn Turntable will be the largest operating turntable available for public viewing and inspection on the West Coast. It will be the focal point of the Center's entrance and the crown jewel of the intersection between the past and the vibrant present at the Center's location—a triangular site bordered by mainline Union Pacific tracks, Portland's MAX light rail and streetcar lines, and a bicycle/pedestrian connection to the city's newest Willamette River bridge, the transit/bike/walking-only Tilikum Crossing. (Continued on page 5.)

FINISHING THE CENTER PIVOT – To be used for the bridge.

Adding to the enjoyment of the turntable, the front yard will have nearly a dozen operable historic railroad crossing signals on display. The turntable and signals will have interpretive panels to help educate visitors about their history, operation, structure and design, and anecdotal information. The restored Brooklyn Turntable will make it easier for volunteer railroaders at ORHC's working museum to move locomotives and rail cars around the property. The bridge and side rails will be a place to exhibit different locomotives and vintage passenger cars. The turntable will also eliminate the need, and considerable cost, of steaming up the engines and running them to North Portland to be turned around.

THE RESTORED BRIDGE – This turns the locomotives.

This vision is near reality. The project is slated for completion in spring 2024. Generous donors have contributed more than $3.3 million to return the Brooklyn Turntable to its railroading glory days. ORHF is grateful to donors such as the National Railway Historical Society.

NRHS Note: In 2019, the NRHS awarded $8,000 to the Oregon Rail Heritage Foundation in Portland, Oregon. The project involved the refurbishment and installation at its Rail Heritage Center of a 102' continuous turntable, the last remaining historic element of the former Southern Pacific Brooklyn roundhouse. It will be one of only a handful of powered operating turntables accessible to the public in the West.

Changes Along the Tracks at New Holland, PA

By MARK HOFFMAN, Harrisburg Chapter NRHS (All article and photo credit.)

The former Pennsylvania/Penn Central Freight Station at 217 South Railroad Avenue in New Holland was located among the disconnected wye, a team track, several industrial sidings and a short-track. These were once clustered in the vicinity of MP 28 along the current NS New Holland Secondary.

Through the mid-1970s, William H. “Bing” Bingaman, a local railroad freight agent, worked in the building and the Railway Express Agency served the station via truck. A concrete roof supported by steel I-beams capped the concrete block, one-story, 1,550 square foot structure, accented with brick quoins.

Built in 1947, the depot replaced a nearby single-story, frame combination freight and passenger station, erected in 1905. When built, the ground-level, right-side portion of the new freight depot was identified by PRR documents as the tool house. This section featured a rear dock door and rails embedded in the concrete floor for housing a track speeder. A vintage, in-floor scale remained in the depot’s freight warehouse. The previous owner enlarged the depot’s loading dock and painted the exterior concrete block walls white. It is sad to see reminders of the small-town railroad landscape disappear.

FORMER PENNSYLVANIA / PENN CENTRAL FREIGHT STATION ON DECEMBER 10, 2022 – For 75 years, the freight station at New Holland Pennsylvania served as a centerpiece among several rail sidings in the vicinity of MP 28 of the current Norfolk Southern New Holland Secondary.

The depot was sold at public auction on October 3, 2022, and the new owner plans to replace the building with a battery warehouse and store on the 0.4-acre site. Norfolk Southern removed the switch for the station track, the west leg of a former wye, on November 2, 2022. On a sunny Sunday, December 10, 2022, the view from along South Railroad Avenue shows the station’s days were numbered. The building’s tenant, a screen printing/embroidery business, completed its move out.

ARRIVING ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 20, THE DEMOLITION CREW WORKED QUICKLY –They rapidly chewed through the building. The end result is shown in this rear view on an appropriately dreary Sunday, January 22, 2023.

By the next weekend, all that remained was a pile of concrete and cinder block chunks from the once sturdy station and loading dock. It is heartbreaking to see this symbol of former small-town railroading activity pass into oblivion. The depot's removal reminds us to get those photos of historic/special structures, facilities and trains before it is too late. Do not take them for granted.

On a positive note, during 2022, work was underway to improve four grade crossings in New Holland Borough. New railroad signage, flashing lights and gates, safety warning devices and supporting relay boxes will soon replace simple crossbucks at South Hoover Ave., South Custer Ave., South Railroad Ave. and Brimmer Ave.

The upgrades are part of a federal million dollar project, overseen by the Penn Department of Transportation. Very poor visibility plagues the crossings, and motorists forget the tracks are active or try beating the train. The Norfolk Southern local freight, usually H28, runs as needed on an irregular schedule at this eastern end of the line to serve Sweetwater Propane and Musselman Lumber in New Holland. Installation work by NS workers has included coordinating with a number of other intersecting public utilities.

President's Column – Membership and Dues

By TONY WHITE, President, NRHS

The temperature and weather is taking us to strange experiences so far in 2023. The extremes are affecting every one of us. Chapters are still going to train shows and making good money and contacts. Word of our signature programs are spreading. Without a closer look, it all seems well.

As the largest rail-related organization in the world, we provide the Bulletin, a world-renowned publication that has a very strong following due to its uniqueness. We provide the NRHS News, the publication that allows any NRHS member or chapter to highlight what they are doing to remember rail history, maintain rail history and promote it. These two publications are the publicity arm of the NRHS. They display our efforts to countless towns, cities and rail enthusiasts everywhere and keeps us prominent.

Each year we struggle to avoid a dues increase. We remember the pain of the membership with the previous dues increases. Everyone reading this knows that prices have gone up across the board. Costs have hit us hard also. Brainstorming ways to maintain the dues, the simplest is for every person who is not a NRHS member who receives copies of our News or receives chapter and other chapter's newsletters, to become a member. We like that we are able to share, but we are not giving those people who are not dues-paying members a chance to support the NRHS. We are giving them a chance to make ends meet without an increase. In other words, they are cheating all of us members and devaluating our membership benefits. Please consider asking those folks to join the NRHS.

The Membership team thanks all of you who have renewed. We are impressed at the number of people who have trusted our system and set up a recurring renewal. For those who have renewed online, you should be receiving your membership cards in a few weeks if you haven't already. For those of you who renewed via mail or through your chapter, it will take longer to receive your membership card due to all of the manual processing that is involved. Sorry about that.

The Convention Committee has been busy setting up the 2023 Annual Convention with our hotel located in Deerfield Beach, Florida. The hotel and events have been selected. It will be nice to reconnect with and hang out with fellow members whom we only see one week a year.
